The other, however, plainly bespeaks that his excellences as an actor are peculiarly of the classic school, or that he has not gotten over his recent work in Salvini's repertoire of plays. This fault was most noticeable in the first two acts, in the last act showing a more natural effect. Miss Birdie Cummings did far, far better than would be expected in a part for which is she is not suited and which she only assumed of necessity. Ivy Clawson was, as always, good in child parts.
